By means of a new marking system, reparations orders, formerly marked and easily identified as such, are disguised as export orders. They are marked with the Roman numeral of the Kombinat and the current order number of the Soviet AG concerned; for example, Order IX/22,500 would involve products of the chemical industry and be part of an aggregate Soviet AG order. The export order on the other hand is marked with the current order number, the Kombinat number, and letters designating the country to which the commodity is to be shipped, for example, 22350/IX/fi (Finland). This system is known only to the order management office and auditing offices of the plant. The producing firms themselves receive the order with no marking other than IX or IX . . . fi; Soviet AG plants receive only the order number.
